Mr. Eaton told the bankers that Mississippi could never prosper as a creator of raw products only and that we would be hewers of wood and drawers of water until we put our best foot forward and capitalized more fully upon our natural resources and the intelligence and energy of our people.

Later Mr Eaton helped organize and became the first president of Mississippi Power Company, a pioneer in industrial development. The evidence of his constructive and enlightened leadership is all about us and provides one of the state's most glowing chapters in community development.
